RANDOLPH

AVE

School days are a collection of the happiest memories of one's life. Looking ahead, four years seem a long, long stretch — looking back, the years seem like days.

You came in timid, awkward, shy children, bewildered by the change from the known to the unknown. We like to think that our work and our influence and example are sending you out dignified, poised, assured young ladies and gentlemen.

Each class leaving is a wrench for your teachers . . . we've come to look upon you as a necessary part of our academic world, and to lean upon you a little. Now we must adjust ourselves to new props — and we'd be less than human if we could let you go without a tiny element of sadness.

There have been days when we've hated you and days when we've loved you — as is the case with all worth while human relationships.

But love is stronger than any other emotion . . . so, here's my greeting to you, Seniors: May life treat you gently, and may you always think of us as happily as we will think of you.

MISS VIOLA J. RUGGLES,

THE JUNIOR CLASS

THE junior class this year has taken an important part in the curricular, athletic, and social activities of the school. We are proud to feel that we have cooperated with the rest of the school whenever we have been called upon to do so in promoting the success of functions sponsored by the school.

This year we have had our chance to show our acting ability, with the presentation of a three-act play entitled "The Mad Hatter." Miss Kelley, our coach, spent many tedious hours directing the cast, and her efforts, as well as those of the cast, are much appreciated by our class.

During the winter months many of our classmates were members of the varsity basketball teams. These players will be present again next year when the basketball season begins. This spring many of our boys also are members of the baseball team. Throughout the year, members of our class have practiced diligently in the school band and twirling corps. Their work merits a great deal of praise.

We now look with confidence toward our senior year, as we are assured that if we follow in the footsteps of the preceding classes, we shall attain our goal.

THE SOPHOMORE CLASS

WHEN we entered school in September we had no idea of the momentous times that we had ahead of us. Our parents and older brothers are in the midst of a fierce fight in order to save our world from tyranny.

Our job is not to fight, but to prepare ourselves to be citizens worthy of reconstructing a battered and war-weary civilization.

Many of us have but these next two years in which to acquire all the knowledge necessary to accomplish this gigantic task.

It is important that, realizing the seriousness of our mission, we should enter our Junior Year with great courage and determination to do it well.

THE FRESHMAN CLASS

IT was with a feeling of mingled fear and curiosity that first we entered Stetson High School, and first beheld the teachers and students who were soon to become our fast friends. Now, as our freshman year ends, we are ready to undertake with confidence the task that awaits us in our second year in High School.

We feel that already we have made many contributions to the progress of our school, chiefly in sports. Among the freshman members of the basketball teams were Anne Norman, Barbara Sullivan, Harold Boothby, and John O'Riley, while James Hartley, George O'Connell, William Keloran, and others have contributed to the success of the baseball team. We have shown an allegiance to the country in which we live by our large purchases of war stamps.

To the teachers, and to our fellow students in Stetson High School we wish the best of luck, and offer our thanks for their help in permitting us to complete the most difficult year in High School with such success.

OBITUARY

THE Class of 1942 passed away on the night of June 17, in the presence of many friends. The funeral services, held on the morning of June 19 in the Randolph Theatre, were in charge of Miss Patricia Galvin. Mr. A. O. Christiansen officiated at the ceremony. Miss Barbara Herrick was the soloist, ably assisted by the Stetson High School choir. Pallbearers were officers of the Classes of '43, '44, and '45.

Four years ago, when '42 was born, no one would have suspected that she would ever leave Stetson High School, for it was not until her second year that she began to acquire many disastrous habits. Her first bad habit was that of improper diet. Chewing gum, soda pop, hot dogs and popcorn, mixed prolificly and promiscuously, were the first stages in her undoing.

The next year, an overactive social life hastened the inevitable hour. The ten o'clock deadline became a midnight curfew, and the results of Cupid's lavishness in the shooting of darts showed plainly in sleepless nights of blissful thought, resulting in consequent loss of appetite and bleary eyes next morning.

By this spring, the Class of '42 realized how far behind she was in scholastic accomplishment, and immediately ensued weeks of cramming for exams and working feverishly for "cum laudes." In fact, she became so wrapped up in her work that she was but poorly represented in the field of sports this spring.

Thus, too much work and not enough exercise, along with an overabundance of pleasures of a rather lighter vein, brought about the death of our well-loved Class of '42.

Now, she begins a life anew, and we wish her all the pleasure and success that she merits by her four years of struggle through Stetson High School. "Fortuna eam ubique sequatur."

LITERARY

A Whopper by a Copper

MACHINERY buzzed and hummed with the sound of a spring torrent; workmen were busy adjusting controls and operating the great engines which stood all around. I felt a sudden rush of air across my face — Lincoln's face, to be exact — and the next instant I shot out of a hole in one of the big machines, down a chute, and in among a great pile of brothers and cousins of mine who were tumbling pell-mell about me from the same chute. But my exposure to daylight was short-lived; soon, along with forty-nine of my brothers, all shiny and new from heads to tails, I was wrapped in paper and shipped far away from my Denver home.

When next I beheld the light of day, I was at a bank teller's window. On the other side of the glass stood a mother and her very small boy, who was eagerly waiting for her to drop me into his hand. As soon as he was able to grasp me, off he ran and pushed me through a little slot in a weight machine. Then, things began to happen! First I plunged down, down into a dark chasm; then I stopped suddenly, and began to go through a series of tunnels, and over belts, and between wheels. All of a sudden, a bell rang; a light flashed, and again I saw daylight and was again clasped tightly in the boy's hand. Apparently, the fellow had "guessed the lucky slot," and had received his penny back!

The boy's joy at seeing me again was short-lived, however. On our way home, he ran so fast and shook me around so that I fell through a hole in his pocket into the gutter. It was not until three days later that an old miser walking along the street spied me, and gleefully added me to his collection. Here I was destined to remain for many years, until finally the old boy died and left me to the Society for the Protection of Motheaten Alleycats.

The next year I really did get myself into trouble, or rather my owner got us into difficulty. The lady — yes, it was a woman, for who else would try a trick like that? — put me into a pay telephone slot, not wanting to waste a whole nickel as she wasn't going to talk the whole three minutes. Then there was a real mixup! Somehow I stuck sideways inside; I began to feel electricity going through my body, and I started to tingle all up and down my e pluribus unum, and the electricity was making Lincoln's hair stand on end. Then the bell started to ring and the lady became scared and shook the box. A whole pile of nickels fell down upon me, but still I was wedged in and could not move either way. The poor lady fled in terror, while I stayed in there and tingled and tried to support the whole pile of nickels on top of me until the repair man arrived.

This repair man, a Mr. Throckmorton, was a good sort of a fellow, but he was rather lax about duties at home. Therefore, one night soon after he brought me home, Mrs. Throckmorton had every light in the house, the iron, the washing machine, the refrigerator and the stove running, she blew out a fuse. Horrors! Not an extra fuse in the house! Then suddenly Mr. T. remembered me. Up from the depths of his pocket I came, and from that day to this I have been rendering admirable service in taking the place of the fuse in the Throckmorton home.

'Tis not a bad life I lead, except that sometimes I sort of tingle and sting when Mrs. T. tries to run all of her electrical appliances at once, and it's nothing compared to the treatment I received inside the telephone. But it is certainly a useless and ignominious life — pinch-hitting for a fuse. But sometimes when Mrs. Throck. gets too lavish in her use of electricity, I'll show them that a penny is a very poor substitute. And I'd like to see them collect from the insurance company when I show the agent the tricks they've been playing on me!

SPRING

IN a war-torn world with horror and chaos all about us, it is a relief to get away from the radio and the newspapers with their news of battle and bloodshed, and contemplate the miracle of a visiting host — the flowers and greenery of spring.

My particular paradise is my meadow, not actually mine, but I like to think so for the few short hours that I am in it. Just a few yards in the rear of my house it starts. First, back of the barn into my field; then over the ivy-covered stone wall and I feel that I am out of this world. Before me lies Mother Nature with all her beauty — beauty flooding up and spilling over into the arms of a rapturous earth. I walk down the edge of the cornfield and feel the tender earth crunch beneath my shoes — feel the south wind blowing softly — hear song sparrows trilling in the alders and woodpeckers tapping out a tune on the old apple trees. I tell myself, “Look out, or you’ll step on those young green shoots of corn and kill them.” Around the corner on the left I find a new crop of hay with traces of fertilizer spread last fall, showing here and there. On my right waves thick, comparatively tall rye (green grass to you and green feed to the farmer), so cool and inviting on a hot day that one could almost plunge into it as one does into water. There are radiant little leaves on all the trees — green and feathery looking — like lace. The fields all about are emerald-green, the sky, an azure blue, and the sunshine, golden. There is new life everywhere through bud and blossom, fruitage and young.

I turn to my right, climb a stone wall, cross a small swampy hay field on whose edges grow cool cedars and marsh grass, crawl through a fence and alight at the edge of a pond. Here, the cows come to drink from its crystal-clear water and, on golden sunshiny days, it sparkles and twinkles like a thousand small jewels. Beyond this is a muddy little section of the pond: uninviting, isn’t it? — yet who could guess that it is a scene of wild excitement every cold winter night as an excellent hockey rink. I go across the dike with the pond on my left and endless meadow-land on my right. As I come to a floating log, I surprise a lazy turtle sunning himself, and he dashes into the water only to arise a few feet away and stare at me as if to say, “What right have you to come down here and scare me?” The shrill chorus of the frogs is like a lovely melody — a pair of ducks screech at me as they fly from their nest to try to lead me away. As I walk along I come to the dam rushing and swirling over slime-covered boards relieving the pond of its ever increasing burden. And I mustn’t forget my friendly little brook that runs through my meadow! Sometimes it seems as though it calls the woods to wake as it winds through the fields and challenges the farmer to rise up and sow. Everywhere in my meadow there is music — harmony for there are no harsh sounds in nature. There is no stagnation in this beautiful season of spring; all is activity, all is fulfilment. . . . It is a time of universal resurrection.

Up nearer the house on the lawns and in the gardens are all the beautiful spring flowers. Our forsythia bushes have been one mass of golden foam — next will be the lilacs (I always feel that they are the prelude to spring); soon there will be tulips, lovely in their colors of red, yellow and white — just now we have jonquils and the fragrant narcissi, violets, and the lovely hawthorne blossoms with their delicate red rose color. In another week or two we will have a profusion of iris, lovely in soft delicate purple and honey gold on long stalks, and before the month of May is over, we will have a sea of apple blossoms in our orchard, pink and white and ever so fragrant!

If you are tired, worried or fed up with war news, go out into the spring sunshine and down into some meadow where the sweet fragrance of flowers will be everywhere, where the bees will be humming, the frogs chorusing, and the larks singing rapturously, “It is Spring! It is Spring!”

Robert Gove, '44

Poetry

We, the Freshmen

On the first day of school we all shook with fear,
When we thought of the problems awaiting us here.

We found every room had its own number o'er,
Sometimes we passed it and got the wrong door.
When our eyes 'pon the clocks should e'er happen to glance,

If they showed the right time, it was only by chance.

It was up just the front stairs and down just the back.

With all of the warnings 'twas hard to keep track.

But then as the weeks began rolling along
We learned all our tasks as you might learn a song.

Now as our Freshman year closes with ease,

Recall how we studied just like busy bees.

Next year when Sophomores we shall all be,

Our eyes, 'pon the "Fumbling Frosh" we'll cast with glee.

Catherine Davis, '45

Spring Chorus

When the leaves start unfurling,

And the buds begin to bloom,

Out from the flowers comes fragrant perfume.

The bees will gather honey, the birds sing sweet refrain

All will chant in chorus: "Spring is here again."

Ivy Meredith, '45

For Him Who Serves His Country

I'll always love you; always I'll yearn

Silently praying for your safe return.

And tho' I can never know where you are;

Tramping the "Old Ground" — sailing afar.

Yet in the dusk, when the heavens are bright

I'll know that you're fighting for all that's right.

Your country has called; you obey'd the command

And I watched you go — God and you hand in hand.

Our hopes at once darkened, our future seemed drear

Of all that was beautiful; naught remained here.

Out of the sadness a voice seemed to rise:

"O never surrender that glorious prize —

A last spark of faith that beneath this grief lies."

It has lighted my heart, and forever 'twill burn

For always I'll love you; pray God you'll return.

Emilie Kosteck, '42

Sonnet

The first lap in our race for life is run;

The mist that veils the future slowly clears.

The trials that we face in coming years

Are many in the web the Fates have spun.

Upon a troubled world we gaze, dismayed.

Despairing of success amid the woes

That hold the troubled earth within their throes;

Yet we must face the future unafraid.

How few there are that we may trust for aid

Amidst the ever-growing time of strife!

How useless is this soul, and void this life

Unless the turmoil end that man has made!

And we it is who shall, that gift which He

Has granted us, preserve — Our Liberty!

Donald Sabeau, '42

A Bluebird in the Snow

The spring had come with its skies of blue
The robins were in song,
The grackle croaked his creaking note,
The crows cawed all day long.

The bluebird's trill in the meadow green
Awoke the sleeping world,
And bursting buds on maple trees
Their downy leaves unfurled.

The peeping frogs in the rushing brook,
The screaming hawks on high
All seemed to say that spring was here
And summertime was nigh.

But soon the sun in a cloud was hid
I felt a sudden breeze,
A chilling wint'ry northland blast
That set me ill at ease.

The leaden skies of the winter past
Were overhead once more
A drifting snowflake touched my cheek.
I heard the cold wind roar.

The snowakes came in unending lines
All driving, dropping down,
They covered all the new green grass.
The cedars wore a crown.

The robins flew toward the warm snug swamp
The wood frogs ceased their trill
And left me with the drifting snow.
The world again was still.

My bright and beautiful spring had gone.
I rose and turned to go,
But I saw a flash of azure blue,
A bluebird in the snow.

He hopped and flew to a tree, and sang
A song that made me glow.
And when I'm sad I'll not forget
The bluebird in the snow.

Calvin Wright, '42

Snow in April

I woke in the morn and the world looked white,
It seemed so strange not to see sunlight,
For here was April on its merry way
And it should have been a lovely new day.

The bird that sings in the tree near-by
Had disappeared, yet I knew not why;
Then as I gazed through the window-pane
I saw the snow, and the answer was plain.

Should snow be with us on an April morn?
The sadness we have when we see no bright dawn —

Should answer this question, I humbly said,
For spring is not spring until winter's dead.

One Little Smile

One little smile sent on its way,
Will travel to people far, far away.
It will make them happy, dispel the gloom;
It will make each face like a flower in bloom.

If you start the smile; think what you've done;
For the first leads to many another one.
From face to face for many a mile;
A victory's won with just one smile.

Harold Johns, '43

Sonnet

"Some things are very dear to me —"
My ribbons tied in large gay whirls,
The clothes that make the high-school girls.
My allowance on the day it's paid,
The unclean saddle shoes I wear,
The foreign accent of Charles Boyer,
The lucky girls with golden hair,
The proms that always seem so gay,
The hot fudge sundaes, O, so rare!
My report card when it bears an "A"!
The sub who serves, when teacher's away,
The long awaited school vacation
I love these so, I almost fear
The day I'll leave them — graduation.

Le Don Réciproque

MAINTENANT nous sommes tous en guerre, et parmi les pays qui combattent il y a les États-Unis et la France — les États-Unis, une démocratie immortelle, et la France, le pays de la liberté de l'égalité, et de la fraternité. La France est vaincue par l'Allemagne, quoique pas pour longtemps, nous espérons, et peut-être elle sera même obligée d'aller à la guerre contre les États-Unis. Figurez-vous cela! Il faut déplorer le sort aujourd'hui de la France, la patrie de la culture, de l'art, et de la langue sans égal, la langue française.

Il y a quelque temps que la France a présenté aux États-Unis un don splendide, la statue de la Liberté, façonné après celle par Frédéric Auguste Bartholdi, qui se trouve dans l'allée des Cygnes à Paris. A présent nous autres Américains, nous voulons donner à la France (quand ce beau pays sera encore libre) une belle statue comme celle qu'elle nous a donnée il y a plus d'une moitié d'un siècle. Que Dieu bénisse les États-Unis pour ceci et qu'il nous donne la victoire et à la France, sa liberté!

IMPLORATIO

O DEA aurca, mihi carissima-una puleherrima de omnibus feminis-casta quam luna, superba similis soli, mystica quam nox-magna in altitudine et alma in ineessu-proxima eordi meae. . . Iterum te cernere tendo foveoque. O omniseiens regina scientiae maximo animo, dirige tua lumina caerulea ad me supplicem! Digna intueri benigne tuam discipulam fidelem; exaudi meas preces ardentes. Illecebrosa, ecce amor meus erga te est profundior quam mare et tranquillior quam silens nox. Tuis manibus firmis duc meos gradus in via eruditionis, omnipotens dea!

DEMOCRACY FOREVER

THE night was dark and dreary, and the wind was howling with all its might. It was raining furiously in the little town of Heinski, Germany.

Karl Goebrich, a watchmaker, was just locking up his small shop. The clock began tolling the hour of ten. He stepped out from beneath the archway of his shop, pocketed his ring of keys, and pulled the collar of his raincoat closely about his short, stubby, well-set neck. For a moment he was lighted up by the street-lamp. It revealed an elderly man with horn-rimmed glasses, a Roman nose, large puffed lips, and a double chin; then just his huge black form could be hazily seen, moving slowly along the dark deserted sidewalk. The rain was still falling in torrents. The fierce wind drove the rain lashingly into the face of Karl Goebrich. He pulled his collar tighter about his chin.

"It'll be nice to get home and sit comfortably in an armchair before the open fire-place — home to my good wife and my little son," muttered the elderly watchmaker.

Then suddenly, as he turned the next corner, two men with drawn Lugers leaped at him in the darkness. A flash of lightening lighted up their features and revealed a German swastika on their arms.

Karl Goebrich frightenedly blurted out, "The Gestapo!" He turned to flee like a frightened rabbit, and hardly had he gone a few steps when he crumpled in a heap on the sidewalk, staining the running rain water a blood-red.

The two Gestapo agents, with guns smoking in hand, walked towards the lifeless form lying face downward on the sidewalk, holstered their weapons, picked up the huge bulk of a man and carried him to their secluded car around the corner. The car swiftly sped toward the wharf.

As the two agents, worshippers of Nazism, dropped the now weighted body of Karl Goebrich into the mucky depths of the water, one exclaimed, "The poor fools, they will never learn to keep their mouths shut, and not to talk against our beloved and mighty Fuehrer!"

Little had Goebrich known that his little son, taught to worship the high and mighty dictator, had been the one who had brought this horrible fate upon him.

Wake Up America! Let's all do what we can to keep our nation a democratic one, forever!

STETSON HIGH SCHOOL

VALE

At the end of our high school days and at the beginning of a new period in our lives, it is fitting that we should affirm our faith in ourselves, in our fellow man, and in our country.

We believe it especially important at this particular time when madmen have been loosed upon the world, that we strengthen our belief in the dignity and worth of human beings, their right to live in peace and security; that we reaffirm our faith in the potentialities of human beings, so that when the despoilers of the things we hold sacred have been disposed of, the real destiny of each one of us will again become apparent. This is democracy, as we see it; for democracy is primarily interest in the welfare of the individual — of all individuals.

We believe that education of all people is essential to our general welfare in a democracy, and that this democracy will survive just so long as good schools are available to every youth. Let us, therefore, have confidence in ourselves, taking advantage of every available educational opportunity, to the extent of our ability. Let us reaffirm our confidence in our fellow man and pledge to our country our unswerving allegiance, that our way of living — all the things we hold near and dear — shall survive the crisis through which we are now passing.
